

The Lovat Scouts: were the creation of Simon 14th Lord Lovat, a wealthy Highland landowner with powerful military and intelligence connections, who was for long president of the Piobaireachd Society. It was recruited largely from Highland gamekeepers and ghillies, many from his own estate. It was to have the famous Willie Ross as pipe-major during the later stages of his career (his father Alexander Ross had worked for the Lovat Estate), and be commanded by J. P. Grant of Rothiemurchus, Lovat's successor as president of the Piobaireachd Society. The tune forms part of James Scott Skinner's sequence of marches named for the Scottish regiments. It is given in its original four parts here; usually the first two only are played by pipers.
