

The musical score is written for a single melodic line in treble clef, 6/8 time. It consists of seven staves of music. The first six staves form the main body of the march, ending with a double bar line. The seventh staff is the first ending, marked with a '1.' and a repeat sign. Following this is a section labeled 'Duchess Kitty's ending', which is a second ending marked with a '2.' and a repeat sign. This is followed by a section labeled 'John MacColl's ending', also marked with a '2.' and a repeat sign. The score is presented in a clean, black-and-white format with standard musical notation including notes, rests, and bar lines.

The Scottish Horse: subtitled “We’ll soon be home again.” This is a good example of a tune written by one person, reinterpreted by another, then passing down in the revised form. The tune was first published in David Glen’s Edinburgh Collection in 1904, attributed to the Marchioness of Tullibardine. This was Kitty Ramsay, the Red Duchess of Atholl, who accompanied her husband, John, Marquis of Tullibardine (later 8th Duke of Atholl) with his regiment, The Scottish Horse, to the South African War. Duchess Kitty was a graduate of the Royal College of Music and a keyboard player of concert standard. John MacColl, who also had a connection with the Scottish Horse, produced the ending to the tune most commonly heard nowadays. MacColl’s coda is perfectly well-mannered, but the Duchess’s one is maybe cuter: I give them both.
