

THE PLAYING OF THE

, in these times, is to consider the sen to the front rank in compet
? It should be realised that f makes the "Champion" Piper, fond of the music, having dext practice. It does not necessar prity on matters appertaining to fine players of to-day have any cl would claim it. Therefore we s not stand in the first rank of p
, and others, not pipers at all, of the music, whose opinion is e most logical view to take would evidence of those still living wh masters." In short, it would a directly taught by Duncan Cam Mackenzie, and the evidence of Mr Bruce, are much more valuable tha not by these "old masters" th ion, we have Mr. Farquharson's son of Donald, played the A. I testimony of the Canntaireachd Peter Bruce is hardly likely to ha y the A himself. The "drin" it be overlooked that a little car er or his pupil, might easily lea carelessness is not likely to resu ect of traditional playing, would a thing in Piobaireachd matters! more likely to decide in favour o ere is little doubt he would at l sibly more in favour of the mid

THE PLAYING OF THE

ned Tutor dealing with Band M ed the Taorluth beats containing
e. It is probable the beat, if time as played in a Piobaireachd Its length alone would do this redominant music of the pipes to s belonging to the "great music" onform to the "time" necessitated s concerned, and we are dealing fectly clear the question of time tion at issue. It does not matter ain, whether Leumluth, Taorluth lass would, of course, be played

TH FOSGAILTE BEAT (Point 7). Is Taorluth beat? Is it not perhaps be three notes in the Fosgailte Surely the only difference between "open," i.e., the chanter is not the grip in place of the D cut. The iddle A in the closed beat.

FROM LOW G ARE FOLLOWED BY A out in the recent discussion and is here is no middle A, does the low ough the latest fashion of writing
? Students of Canntaireachd ee syllable beat, the old way as on the left, is better than e modern school, to be consistent s on the right, with the centre so!

TE ON PAGE 148 OF ANGUS MACKAY
as follows:—

ver in each Triplet is held while the 2d es throughout the two last Variations,

THE PLAYING OF THE

the footnote, nor for the fact that the knowledge of staff notation is needless, is the word "triplet" so abused spirit, when evidence is produced that the beat would have been played by any notes? (See notes on the CrannachCrimmon Canntaireachd.)

It is clearly clear from the footnote, however, that the "er" is the disputed A in the "er" corresponding themal note in the Mach beat. This point is equally valuable to John MacGregor!

THE BEATS (FROM E, F, ETC.), IN CRUNLUTH practice to-day, even with "change" of the Crunluth Fosgailte beat. The beat is distinctly heard. In Gestq's Canntaireachd the beat is a four syllable one, as shown on the left, but there is also a three syllable form, as shown on the right. The beat is played, whether as a four or three syllable beat (from E, F, etc.), in such a way as to contain the same number of syllables. If the three syllable method is adopted what is left after the first note at the end of the beat? In the Fosgailte beat no themal notes left, in the closed beat one themal note and—what, the A? (Vide illustration). If short, there must be, in the closed beat, a note or note to correspond to the syllable.

THE BEATS (FROM E, F, ETC.), IN CRUNLUTH AND THE MACH BEATS (Pointing out the difference between the closed Taorluth beats and the Mach beats. The fact that the Mach beat is played as a four syllable beat comes to the A in the closed beat. It is clear that the Mach beat has no relation to the Crunluth beat. Any serious student of Piobaireachd should be able to play the Mach beat as a four syllable beat.

THE PLAYING OF THE

do in a similar way about staff notation. The notes do not represent the beats as played, but only notation in certain cases, where the player does not play it, but it can be played.

The Canntaireachd Society admits the Taorluath notes, the middle note being D, and if the D beat has three notes which are not D, do they write the Mach beat on the left, and the Taorluath on the right, in spite of the fact that the Canntaireachd vocable they quote is for the Mach beat? They should, to be consistent, write the Taorluath on the left!

It is beyond question the Mach beat is written alone proving this, apart from the fact that page 148 in MacKay.

The Canntaireachd vocables for the closed beats are the same as do those for the Mach beat. It remains many closed beats common to both, justified in the assumption the