

THFUL YOU ARE

DONALD appears to be the only Ground, 16 in its Doubling, 12 in its original. It is clearly a two-lined one of eight bars, the first line being practically a whole note. There is a change in the rhythm of the first part, just where it could be used to justify classification of the tune as a Ground.

It is interesting to find the rhythmic change immediately brought up by so many of the 14th Ground bars. Comparison of the two is of great assistance. The Doubling is clearly a whole note.

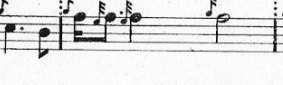

It seems clear, beyond question, that the E is a grace or passing note. The last notes of his 10th and 11th bars are clearly a mutilated version of the Doubling, here also, points to a whole note Doubling.

The Doubling, and its Doubling, of 12 bars each, between his first four and second four bars, will be noticed by students of the Doubling. Donald's first four to make the first line of the tune. This arrangement of the Doubling.
