

FOR ALASTAIR D

s to be only two published versions of "Mor" and the Piobaireachd version in Gesto's publication. The metre, 4 : 6 . 4, is found in the Piobaireachd Society's version, however, but only in the first part alone, for it has 16 bars in the first part (4 : 6 . 4 metre). The second part has inserted his third Ground. The Piobaireachd Society omits the second part with three bars, which are in the metre of the Ground 6 . 6 . 4. Such a variation is not found by any known cases and is, in fact, a construction of a 6 . 6 . 4 metre tune. Gesto's Canntaireachd version. And we are then fairly safe in assuming that the opposite page, showing the same tune, will indicate that a very poor version from the Canntaireachd. The following is—

hioradin	hodro	botrieo,	hiodin	hodro
hiavirla	hieha hieha,		hibahiha	hieha
rio havi	hiea hovi,		hiochin	hieha

variations in the Canntaireachd version, they are chiefly responsible for the error. Close study of these variations shows that the first part is repeated for it looks as if some player in the second part and then repeated the first part. This would seem the only explanation for the error in the Doubling and in the Canntaireachd (omitted). The other Variations in the Canntaireachd are being omitted. Dealing with the Doubling "commences with Beethoven goes back to two beats per bar (p. 30), probably confusing his 2/4 with 3/4, overlapping produces six beats in the first part, this the two excess beats in the second part, also the two excess beats in the third part, the ones belonging to Division 14

FOR ALASTAIR

NOTE.—It would be interesting to know if any real authority exists for the name "Allister Dhu" in connection with this tune. "Allister Dhu" of Glengarry, E. Scotland, died before 1645, probably about 1640. "Allister Dhu" died in 1724, member of his Clan. In the absence of any authority connecting the tune with Allister Dhu, I have attempted to consider the Lament for the Duke of Gordon, for its style is not suggestive of the MacCrimmon, who was probably composed in 1630. It is more likely to be the work of the later composers, otherwise they would have "died a natural death."

	8	9	10
Geol Mor and Piob: Society esto.
(22) (23) (24) 25	(26) (27)	(28) (29)
	(30) (31)		